

Lakeshore village in the Adirondacks

View of a village in the Adirondacks, most likely Lake Placid. In the foreground are a row of leafless deciduous trees and one evergreen alongside a cabin. The lake is in the middle ground. In the background is the village; a handful of houses and numerous trees are visible. Mountains can be seen in the far distance. This image was created to record forestry and parks activities of the New York State Forest, Fish and Game Commission, Conservation Commission, or Conservation Department.
