

Laying in a wood supply for winter French Vosges near Oserardner

View of a man walking over a wooden bridge with a small stream in the Vosges Mountains of France, near a place called Oserardner. He is carrying wood for the winter months on his back. His stone house can be seen on the right, and behind that is a line of poles that appear to support either electric wires or netting of some sort. This image was probably created to record the forestry-related activities of the New York State Forest, Fish, and Game Commission.
