Melissa Crane's Essay

Report of Jaron Cadet bernee. I began work at home the twenty accord - april and priviled the thirty first of august. Early in the spring I did horsework and garden work. The first of may I planted two acres I fill soon and dropped one acre y potatoes. In haying time I drove the horse on the Lay fork and buncled hay, In the latter part of June I watched which thee hours each day for three weeks I worked from seven in the morning until seven or eight at night. From april dienty record until june winty first I lost one days work, the remainder of the summer I did not love any days with except the last week in august which I look for my vacation. On the whole I think my time was well spent and my word was ratifactory. We rave more chope this you than we kould have raised of I had not been released from rebook. I think it is a good plan on the department to excuse attribute from school in the spring to help on the farme while help is as sever, and when the farmere are brying to araise more crope than

In 1917, the New York State Education Department began a program that allowed students between the ages of 16 and 18 in good academic standing to sign up and become Farm Cadets. Many teens jumped at the chance to become a Farm Cadet, and to leave their homes in the cities and towns and to assist with the war effort by replacing the laborers who had enlisted in the military and gone to fight overseas. From April-September, students worked on farms throughout the state and, in order to receive academic credit for their contribution, wrote essays about their experience.;In this essay, Melissa Crane writes about her experience and why she thinks it's a good idea that students are excused from school to work on farms.
