

~~separate debit and credit~~

This image displays a large, organized collection of historical manuscript pages, likely from a 15th-century account book. The pages are arranged in a grid of 8 rows and 10 columns. Each page is aged, showing significant yellowing and some staining, particularly along the edges. The handwriting is in a dark ink, using a cursive script characteristic of the late Middle Ages. The layout of the pages is highly structured, with many pages featuring pre-printed or hand-drawn columns and lines, indicating they were used for recording financial transactions or accounts. The text is written in a consistent manner across the pages, suggesting a single scribe or a well-regulated office. The overall appearance is that of a well-preserved but clearly antique document.
