

An Oak forest being marked for a thinning

A German forester marks a young oak tree for thinning by stripping away a section of bark. The tree will later be removed, giving other trees more room to grow. Representatives from the department of conservation toured this forest in Rottenbuch, Germany, in order to study the forest management methods. This image was created to record the agricultural studies performed by the New York State Conservation Department.

Identifier

NYSA_14297-87_4693

Alternate Identifier

DMS ID Number: 143914

Date

1904

Contributor

A. Knechtel

Repository

New York State Archives

Source

New York State Archives, New York (State). Conservation Dept. Photographic prints and negatives, [ca. 1904-1949], 14297-87_4693.

Rights

This image is provided for education and research purposes. Rights may be reserved. Responsibility for securing permissions to distribute, publish, reproduce or other use rest with the user. For additional information see our Copyright and Use Statement

More From This Series

Conservation Department photographic prints and negatives

Geographic Locations

Germany (is associated with)