Amid Unbearable Frustration, the Legend Of Jerry Rosenberg Continues to Grow

by Larry Smith

Each month Inside Litigation profiles a lawyer who is living a significant moment in litigation practice in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, or whose career path is being followed by the same or similar figures in the industry.

It may have been the most extraordinarily colorful moment in his career before the New York State Department of Law, in 1971, Jerome Rosenberg became the first inmate to be elected as a member of the Attica Prisoners' Union. For his role in the uprising, he was sentenced to 30 years in prison, but he was released after 14 years.

The prison term, Rosenberg claims, made him a better lawyer. "I was in the prison for 14 years, and I was in the prison for 14 years," he says. "I was in the prison for 14 years, and I was in the prison for 14 years." "I was in the prison for 14 years, and I was in the prison for 14 years."

The judge was amazed, even impressed. He said, "I was in the prison for 14 years, and I was in the prison for 14 years." "I was in the prison for 14 years, and I was in the prison for 14 years."

Mr. Judge Corning, in speaking to the press, would also make a point of saying much to the press. "I was in the prison for 14 years, and I was in the prison for 14 years." "I was in the prison for 14 years, and I was in the prison for 14 years."

Rosenberg's career since he left the prison has been a mix of success and failure. He has been a successful lawyer, but he has also been a failure. He has been a successful lawyer, but he has also been a failure. He has been a successful lawyer, but he has also been a failure.

24 years in the prison, in the conditions of corporate power. Over the years, he has been a successful lawyer, but he has also been a failure. He has been a successful lawyer, but he has also been a failure.

March 1992, which four years ago became a movie. TV movie named The Attica Prisoners. An important moment in the Attica prison in 1971, Rosenberg claimed "I was in the prison for 14 years, and I was in the prison for 14 years."

Yet his own personal tragedy is that, for all the publicity he's gotten, Rosenberg, now 65, and his four children and four grandchildren, continue to live in poverty. He has been a successful lawyer, but he has also been a failure. He has been a successful lawyer, but he has also been a failure.
